Dear Friends:

What is it about a hospital that inspires so many to give so much – of their time, caring and resources?

After all, no one is forced to work or volunteer here, or to share their expertise or treasure with us. Yet at Atrium Medical Center, we’re blessed with the support of thousands of competent and caring employees, physicians, volunteers and donors.

Regardless of our individual interests and talents, we’re all focused on a common goal: serving the patients who need us with exceptional compassion and skill. It’s the bond that unites and motivates us. We’re driven by the opportunity to make a difference, one patient and family at a time – inspiring hope and delivering excellence every day.

Atrium Medical Center Foundation made great strides in 2012. Our youngest patients benefited from our community’s enthusiastic support for the Little Blessings campaign to help newborns in our region grow up healthy and strong. Additional contributions, endowments and grants funded patient-focused, life-giving services and enhancements throughout the medical center.

To each of you who cares for our patients directly, thank you. To those who give your time and energy to support our caregivers, the hospital and the Foundation, my sincerest thanks. And to our generous donors who become our partners in building healthier communities, I am deeply grateful.

Though we are thousands, we are one as we inspire hope and deliver excellence for those entrusted to our care at Atrium Medical Center. Together, we’re changing lives. We couldn’t do it without you.

Gratefully,

Carol J. Turner, FACHE
President and CEO
Atrium Medical Center
Alexander Pope, 18th century English poet, wrote, “Hope springs eternal.” More than 200 years later, these words still resonate with us. “Excellence is not an act, but a habit,” wrote ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle. More than 2,000 years later, the quest for excellence fuels virtually every organization.

At Atrium Medical Center, hope and excellence are very much alive and gathering more energy every day. Atrium Medical Center Foundation is proud to assist the hospital in inspiring hope in our community and in delivering excellence in patient care and service. This annual report provides a snapshot view of how some of our supporters shared their time and treasure to make 2012 a year of progress and promise in health care for our region.

From hospital employees, physicians and auxiliary members, to area businesses and organizations, to some of southwest Ohio’s historic families, the Foundation reached out in many directions in 2012, building awareness, seeking engagement and garnering support. Here are some of the stories of hope and excellence you will find in this report.

• Gifts to the Little Blessings campaign are helping newborns in our area get the healthiest start possible. We were fortunate to receive a grant from CareSource Foundation for the High Risk OB Clinic. And Hilltop Obstetrics & Gynecology established an endowment in memory of Dr. Jack Davis to help fund infant and children’s health initiatives, including HEAL (Help Endure a Loss), a program Dr. Davis supported passionately during his lifetime.

• Among our own ranks, hospital employees established a memory garden along the walking path to honor their fellow workers who pass away. Atrium Auxiliary Middletown funded equipment that will help make the hospital even more comfortable and efficient.

• We’re grateful for long-standing support from the Middletown Area Federation of Women’s Clubs, funding health care for women in need, and for generous donations from several area businesses.

• And finally, we salute several staunch Foundation supporters and outstanding Middletonians: Foundation board member Sarah Kaup, who administers the Arthur Harvey Foundation, founded by her late grandfather; former hospital assistant administrator Jim Elder, who empowered the Foundation in its early years and whose wife, Jane, co-founded the Maternal Child Health Center; and the late Perry Thatcher, whose generosity helped make Atrium Medical Center possible.

With dedicated supporters like these – and the hundreds of others who make our work possible – Atrium Medical Center Foundation will continue to inspire hope and deliver excellence. We invite you to join us.

Atrium Medical Center Foundation
Civic leader and tireless entrepreneur Perry Thatcher may not have been a tall and brawny man, but his generous spirit and love of family, friends and all things Middletown were beyond supersized. Perry’s daughters, Sheree Garrett and Kathie Wasseneich, residents of Middletown, and Jennifer Thatcher, who lives in Boca Raton, Florida, remember their father as an honest, caring man who wanted to make the world a better place.

Perry lost his battle with pancreatic cancer in January 2010 at age 79. His memorial service overflowed with people whose lives he had touched. “He worked quietly behind the scenes,” says Sheree, “and wasn’t looking for glory or recognition. He just wanted to help.” To memorialize their father, who served on the Foundation board for several years, his daughters have established the Perry Thatcher Endowment for Cancer Services with Atrium Medical Center Foundation. They’re also considering ways to memorialize their mother’s legacy with an additional naming opportunity.

A Middletown High School graduate and Navy veteran with a master’s degree from the University of Cincinnati, Perry began his professional career at Inland Container in 1949 as the janitor. He retired as general manager 30 years later. “He may have retired, but he never stopped working. His natural curiosity, energy and entrepreneurial spirit made that impossible,” says Kathie.

Perry went on to become somewhat of a paper mogul, founding a number of corrugated paper companies. He developed the environmentally friendly macro corrugated paper used for McDonald’s clamshell boxes, designed the actual box and invented the special equipment needed to make it. “Perry was a thinker. You could always see the wheels turning,” says Bob Fairchild, a long-time business partner and close family friend.

The quintessential multitasker, Perry was also known as Middletown’s biggest cheerleader. He was a strong supporter of the annual Charity Ball and a one-man economic development team for his efforts to revitalize the downtown area. “Dad saved a number of historic buildings from the wrecking ball,” notes Kathie. “Along with William Akers and the late Barry Levey, he rescued the Manchester Inn and was also responsible in large measure for Cincinnati State opening a downtown Middletown branch in the empty Cinergy building.”

Perry did more than buy real estate; he built it, too. At a time when there were few apartments in Middletown, Perry and his wife, Janet, along with Bob and Thelma Rossi, built a 32-unit apartment complex at Grand Avenue and Jackson Lane. “My partnership with Perry had no legal documents and no contracts. A handshake and a hug were enough,” explains Bob Rossi, who had worked with Perry at Inland and knew him in high school when both worked at The Jug restaurant.

In 1996, after almost 45 years of marriage, Perry’s beloved wife passed away at age 63 from the neurodegenerative disease bovine spongiform encephalopathy (mad cow disease). “Dad used to faint at the sight of needles and blood,” remembers Jennifer, “but all that stopped when our mother became ill. They traveled all over the country looking for a cure, but when it was clear there was none, he took care of her himself until the end.”

“After my mother passed away, my father continued to pursue his vision,” says Sheree. “Dad’s love for this city can still be seen everywhere. My sisters and I hope to continue to honor his passion.”

[1] Janet and Perry Thatcher were married almost 45 years and had three daughters – Sheree Garrett, Kathie Wassenich and Jennifer Thatcher – who have established the Perry Thatcher Endowment for Cancer Services with Atrium Medical Center Foundation. The Thatcher daughters also are considering ways to memorialize their mother’s legacy with an additional naming opportunity.

[2] Janet and Perry were partners in Perry’s efforts to revitalize Middletown’s downtown.

[3] Perry was a Middletown High School graduate and Navy veteran and held a master’s degree from the University of Cincinnati.

[4] Known as Middletown’s biggest cheerleader, Perry began his professional career as a janitor at Inland Container Corp. and retired as general manager 30 years later. He went on to found a number of corrugated paper companies.
JIM ELDER

Seeking the Greater Good

[2] In the late 1970s, Jim’s wife, Jane, cofounded the hospital’s Maternal Child Health Center to care for low-income mothers and children. Jane served as director for five years.

[3] Today, Jim lives in Florida. He was the first hospital executive to work closely with the Foundation.

[4] Jim and Jane Elder are members of Atrium Medical Center Foundation’s Heritage Society, honoring those who include the hospital in their will or estate plan. Jane passed away in 2010.
Look up “collaboration” in the dictionary and you might find a picture of Jim Elder, a former executive vice president at Middletown Hospital, predecessor to Atrium Medical Center. He is known for artfully engaging hospital administrators and physicians in the partnerships and consensus-building necessary to move the hospital forward.

“My forte,” Jim says, “was working with groups to achieve success. The secret is to look for the greater good, always consider all sides of an issue and don’t be distracted by the squeaky wheel.”

“Jim is one of the finest leaders I have ever seen,” notes long-time friend Gregory Siewny, MD. “To this day, when I face an important decision, I ask myself, ‘What would Jim do?’”

After earning an undergraduate degree from Mount Union College followed by an MBA from Kent State University, Jim spent four years working for Sears. Don Daisy, a fellow Lions Club member and then-chairman of the hospital board, suggested to Jim that working for the hospital would be a better use of his skills. Jim joined the hospital staff in the mid-1950s as personnel and public relations director. When Walter Mischley became administrator, Jim became assistant administrator and later was named executive vice president.

Although Jim retired and moved to Florida in 1989, the Elder family connection to the hospital remains intact. Jim’s stepdaughter Nancy Stillwell works at Atrium as an MRI tech and her husband, Douglas, is a pharmacist with Premier Health (Atrium’s parent organization).

In the late 1970s, Jim’s wife, Jane, cofounded the hospital’s Maternal Child Health Center with John Perkins, MD, to care for low-income mothers and children. Jane served as director for five years. “The three of us felt we had really accomplished something,” Jim recalls. “The clinic was a major step forward in medical care for Middletown area women and children.” Sadly, Jane passed away in 2010.

A generous donor and a member of the Foundation’s Heritage Society (honoring those who include the hospital in their will or estate plan), Jim was the first hospital executive to work hand in hand with the Foundation. He focused on recruiting strong leaders for a working board and urged them to provide an example for others by giving to the Foundation during their lifetimes, as well as through their estates. “In the early 1980s, the hospital board was always considered the significant body,” Jim says. “But we empowered the Foundation board and held it up as important.”

Asked what he thinks of Atrium Medical Center Foundation today, Jim says, “Its fantastic growth has far outstripped my vision. It just goes to show how little we accomplish alone, and how much we can accomplish together.”
He was a teenage hero: No. 3, a guard on the legendary 1957-58-59 Jerry Lucas-led Middletown High School basketball team that won a yet-to-be-repeated 76 consecutive games and captured two state championships. But Gene Snow’s story doesn’t stop there. Gene is still a hero to his family, friends and the many people he has helped over the last five decades.

Upon graduating from Middletown High School, Gene went to work at Armco and attended technical college. After the birth of twins and the death of his first wife, Gene met and married Katherine Duncan, and they had a son. Now married for 46 years, together they raised three children in Madison Township: Travis of Woodbridge, Virginia; Tracy of Lawrenceville, Georgia; and Elliot of Louisville, Kentucky.

After their own children had graduated from college and left the nest, Gene and Katherine sponsored and made a home for a Madison High School foreign exchange student – a basketball player – from Germany. Adebisi Laga is a physician now, and the Snows remain in close communication with him and his family. Today Gene and Katherine, who continue to live in Madison Township and support the community and its schools, have seven grandchildren ranging in age from 9 to 22 years old.

With Katherine by his side, Gene became a tireless champion for the city of Middletown, a staunch supporter of Atrium Medical Center Foundation and an advocate for those less fortunate than he and his family. Gene’s service to the Foundation dates back to 1997. Today he chairs the nominating committee and is a member of the executive committee. “The Foundation helps keep open places like Primary Health Solutions and the Maternal Child Health Center and makes possible initiatives like the Little Blessings campaign for newborns and the High Risk OB Clinic,” Gene says. “These efforts are part of the fabric of our community.”

In 1991, after almost 35 years with Armco, Gene retired from his job as machine shop supervisor, a position he had held for a decade. But he wasn’t idle for long. As Gene explains, “One of Middletown’s most enthusiastic cheerleaders, the late Perry Thatcher, said to me, ‘Gene, someone has to do something. Someone has to step up and help this city.’ Perry inspired me to step up.” (See the article about Perry Thatcher on page 4.)

After spending several rewarding years teaching at Garfield Alternative School, Gene accepted Municipal Court Judge James Combs’ invitation to become his bailiff. When Judge Combs passed away, Gene joined Judge Mark Wall’s court as bailiff, where he remained for 18 years. Working for the Municipal Court was a win-win situation for everyone. “I was a bridge between the judge and the offenders and their families. I did what I could to position them for success in the future,” Gene says. “At the time, I was volunteering with Habitat for Humanity. Judge Wall kept us staffed with workers by making volunteering for Habitat a form of community service for the offenders.” Gene was president of the Middletown chapter of Habitat for Humanity for 10 years and continues to serve the organization. Over the last 15 years, Gene’s Habitat chapter has built 55 homes – and counting.

Gene and Katherine are service-minded people. Both volunteer for numerous nonprofit organizations such as Middfest International, Big Brothers/Sisters, Teen Mentoring Committee and Rosa Parks Elementary School. Gene serves on the board of Middletown Community Foundation, is a past moderator of American Baptist Churches of Southwestern Ohio and is a silver life member of NAACP. Gene and Katherine are active members of New Era Baptist Church, serving as deacon and deaconess. In 2006, Gene was inducted along with his fellow Middies into the Ohio High School Basketball Hall of Fame.

On or off the court, once a hero, always a hero.

[1] Katherine and Gene Snow, married for 46 years, have been tireless champions for the city of Middletown and advocates for those less fortunate than their family. For Atrium Medical Center Foundation, Gene chairs the nominating committee and serves on the executive committee.

[2] Longtime Foundation supporters, the Snows signed the ceremonial last steel beam for the new Atrium Medical Center in June 2006.

[3-6] The Snows are parents to two sons, one daughter and grandparents to seven, ages 9 to 22. Their extended family also includes a former German exchange student.
For 75 years, Middletown’s pioneering accounting firm, Clark Schaefer Hackett, has provided area businesses and individuals with accounting, tax and professional advisory/consulting services. Atrium Medical Center Foundation has benefitted greatly from both the firm’s business acumen and its generosity.

It all began in 1938 when 28-year-old Virgil T. Clark opened his accounting practice in a cramped, shared office in Middletown’s First American Bank Building. Under the subsequent leadership of accounting professionals such as William H. Schaefer, CPA; Peter J. Hackett, CPA; Neil J. O’Connor, CPA; and Thomas D. Hazelbaker, CPA – all now retired – what had started as one man’s dream eventually grew into Clark Schaefer Hackett (CSH).

Today, with additional offices in Cincinnati, Springfield, Dayton, Columbus, Toledo and Cleveland, CSH is recognized as one of the region’s top five CPA firms. “Virgil Clark tapped into a real need in our community,” says Carl R. Coburn, CPA, current president of the firm. “CSH’s growth over the past 75 years is due both to our loyal clients and our commitment to excellence.”

“In 2012, CSH merged its Dayton and Middletown locations and moved into a 20,000-square-foot space in the new Austin Landing development along I-75, just south of Dayton,” explains CSH shareholder Thomas L. Hackett, CPA. “As a result, the ownership group (Middletown CPAs, LLC) was left with an empty, partially furnished building in Middletown.”

Candice DeClark Peace, JD, CPA, a CSH shareholder since 1985, took the lead in structuring a solution that not only addressed the firm’s real estate situation but also benefited Atrium Medical Center Foundation. It was innovative and not surprising, coming from someone who has been a tireless Foundation supporter since 1999 and is a former chair of the Foundation board. “Bill Schaefer was a strong mentor to me,” notes Candy. “He urged me to get involved in the community. I chose Atrium Medical Center Foundation as a way to do that.”

Upon moving into their consolidated Miami Valley location, Middletown CPAs,
LLC, sold their Breiel Blvd. building to the Foundation in a bargain sale. The 13 CSH shareholders who comprised Middletown CPAs, LLC, then donated all but a small amount of their proceeds back to the Foundation as personalized charitable gift annuities. “Individual donors were able to decide how their funds should benefit the hospital and how their annuity income would be managed,” Candy explains. The annuities were earmarked to support initiatives such as the Little Blessings campaign for newborns, nursing scholarships and the chapel, or were designated for the best use of the Foundation.

“It’s the kind of win-win arrangement prospective donors may not often consider. Fortunately, it’s CSH’s business to create opportunities like this for its clients,” Carl Coburn says. “Did Virgil Clark anticipate such an outcome when he launched his one-man firm back in 1938? Perhaps not. But we do know he worked hard for his clients and his community. And this legacy lives on today at Clark Schaefer Hackett.”

[1] In 2012, Clark Schaefer Hackett merged their Middletown and Dayton locations and moved to Austin Landing, just south of Dayton. The ownership group sold their empty, partially furnished building on Breiel Boulevard to Atrium Medical Center Foundation in a bargain sale.

[2] In addition, the 13 ownership shareholders donated all but a small portion of their proceeds back to the Foundation as charitable gift annuities to support a variety of Foundation initiatives.

[3] Atrium Medical Center and the Foundation currently are considering the most effective use of the building to benefit patients and the community.
SARAH KAUP
Arthur Harvey Foundation Pays It Forward

Honoring her grandfather’s legacy.

If you’ve driven westward through the intersection of Central Avenue and Verity Parkway in downtown Middletown, you have seen artist Eric Henn’s massive mural – Port Middletown on the Miami/Erie Canal – adorning the TV Middletown building. Did you know that the man pictured on the left side of the mule-drawn cart is Middletown legend Arthur Harvey? Sarah Kaup is Harvey’s granddaughter, a long-time Atrium Medical Center Foundation supporter and current board member. She’s as proud of this family recognition as she is of being a fourth-generation Middletonian and the administrator of her grandfather’s legacy, the Arthur Harvey Foundation.

Arthur was an executive with the Gardner-Harvey Paper Co., founded in the late 1800s by his father, George, and Colin Gardner, Jr. He started his Foundation in the mid-1960s in memory of his daughter and Sarah’s mother, Marabelle Harvey Robertson, who had succumbed to breast cancer in 1964. Initially, the Harvey Foundation focused its grant-making on one or two full college scholarships per year.

“Before he passed away in 1972, my grandfather asked me to carry on his philanthropic work,” Sarah explains. “I chose to continue his scholarship program while also focusing on the hopes and needs of people in the Middletown area.” Today, the Harvey Foundation supports Atrium Medical Center Foundation and other worthwhile causes including Miami University Middletown, Abilities First, Hospice Care of Middletown, the Church of the Ascension and many more.

“My great-grandfather, George,” Sarah notes, “was a strong advocate for building the original ‘hospital on the hill.’ At one time, he had a terrible hunting accident and was taken to Armco’s on-site hospital because there was no place else to go fast. He knew firsthand how much a community hospital could mean to Middletown.

“The Harvey Foundation has supported Atrium’s growth and development,” Sarah continues. “We honored my great-grandfather, George, by helping to build Atrium Medical Center. We remembered my grandfather and my mother with a major gift to Atrium’s Cancer Center and by donating the hospital’s ...
Many people walk by the fountain and toss in a coin for good luck.”

In 2007, Sarah and her husband, Gary, a semi-retired attorney, served as co-chairs of the Foundation’s inaugural gala in support of the Heart Center. Sarah continues to volunteer on the gala steering committee.

“I remember my grandfather as a quiet, unassuming man with piercing blue eyes,” Sarah says. “He was the kindest person I have ever known and a dear to everyone. Indeed, our family has been fortunate,” she continues, “but I was taught early on the importance of giving back, which is why I am involving my children in the Harvey Foundation now. I want to ensure that future generations of our family continue to follow in my grandfather’s footsteps by giving back to Middletown.”
DR. JACK DAVIS

Hilltop Physicians
Remember Beloved Colleague
Jack Davis strived to be a perfect doctor in an imperfect world, remembers Charles Hageman, MD, a founding partner, along with Gregory Siewny, MD, of Hilltop Obstetrics & Gynecology. “He was dedicated to his family and colleagues, deeply knowledgeable in medicine, and committed to optimizing patient care. We used to call him ‘the professor.’ We rarely saw him without a medical journal in hand.”

Dr. Davis practiced in Middletown, Lebanon and West Chester with his partners. When he passed away suddenly in October 2012 at age 55, all who knew him felt the profound loss of an exceptional man. “He was a serious person, well read and always prompt,” remembers colleague Casey Boyce, MD. “But there was a passion there, too. He was deeply involved with his patients and cared tremendously about their medical and emotional well-being.”

To honor Dr. Davis, the Hilltop physicians established the Dr. Jack Davis Endowment Fund to Support HEAL and Children’s Health at Atrium Medical Center. The endowment will help support the hospital’s youngest patients by focusing on the HEAL (Help Endure a Loss) Program, which assists parents who are coping with the death of an infant; the Safe Sleep program for infants; the High Risk OB Clinic; and children’s health in general. In addition, gifts made in memory of Dr. Davis by family, friends, patients and colleagues were directed to the endowment fund.

“Programs like HEAL and Safe Sleep make Atrium’s Family Birth Center different from others,” explains Dr. Siewny, an Atrium Medical Center Foundation board member. “They offer an extra touch of caring, free to patients who need it. HEAL really is the most charitable program I have ever seen, and Jack put his heart and soul into it. It’s no surprise Atrium nurses selected him as the 2010 physician of the year.”

In 1989, soon after being discharged from the Navy, Dr. Davis joined Dr. Hageman and Dr. Siewny in their then year-old practice in Middletown. “Jack’s wife, Michele, a nurse whom he met while stationed in California, also joined the practice as our surgery scheduler,” Dr. Hageman explains. “Michele came back to work soon after Jack’s passing. We are like a family here; Jack’s death hit us all hard and we continue to grieve. It’s good to have Michele close to us.”

Hilltop’s practice manager, Michelle Profitt, remembers Dr. Davis as a great advocate for the staff. “When we wanted to try something new, we ran it by him first for an honest opinion,” she says. In honor of all the Hilltop physicians, the staff has funded a fountain, bearing a special plaque in heartfelt remembrance of Dr. Jack Davis, in the HEAL garden on the Atrium campus.

The Pendleton Art Center in downtown Middletown was “soiree central” on the evening of December 1, 2012, as the 92nd annual Charity Ball – the oldest running event in the city – kicked off the winter holiday season with an Evening in Paris.

The signature event of the Middletown Area Federation of Women’s Clubs, the Charity Ball raises funds for an endowment established in 2010 at Atrium Medical Center Foundation to facilitate access to health care for uninsured or underinsured Middletown-area women. Tammi Foreman Thompson, a former vice president of the Federation, along with Middletown vice mayor Dan Picard chaired the 2012 event. Honorary chairs were family practice physician Kevin Strait, MD, and wife, Barb, who currently chairs the Atrium Medical Center Foundation board.

Federation president Lavonne Michael has overseen the Charity Ball for the past two years and was instrumental in moving the event to the new Pendleton Art Center in 2011. In 2012, she and her team added some new twists in food, decor and entertainment to the celebration. They also went above and beyond, working creatively behind the scenes to identify local partners and find innovative ways to raise additional funds with auctions, concerts, dinners and other special events.

Over the years, the Federation’s commitment to the Charity Ball has raised more than $1 million for the hospital to fund equipment, education programs and new services that would have been delayed or not available without the Federation’s support. In 2012, more than $18,000 was added to the total.
“The 92-year partnership between the Federation and the hospital is remarkable, not only for its longevity, but also for all the good the Federation has accomplished,” says Michael D. Stautberg, Foundation president. “The Foundation and the hospital are deeply grateful to all past and present Federation members.”

Stepping down from her leadership position, Lavonne says, “I have met many incredible women while serving as president of the Federation. In tandem with Atrium Medical Center Foundation, we are working hard to ensure that all women in the Middletown area have access to the excellent health care they deserve.”

Sometimes the people who most need dental care are the least likely to get it. Thanks in part to a grant from Atrium Medical Center Foundation to Primary Health Solutions, more southwest Ohio residents can smile, knowing they have access to dental care regardless of their financial situation.

“It’s a natural partnership,” says Michael J. Schneider, chair of the Foundation’s Distribution Committee. “Primary Health Solutions shares our commitment to building a healthier community. Inspiring hope and delivering excellence are values common to both organizations. Our 2012 gift will help them expand dental services for people who might not otherwise be able to receive preventive care and treatment.”

Primary Health Solutions, formerly Butler County Community Health Consortium, was formed in November 1999. It emerged from the work of the Health Care Leadership Group, a coalition of Butler County leaders convened to address the current and future health care needs of the county’s poor and underserved. In 2004, the Middletown Health Center (a partnership between the city and the former Middletown Regional Hospital) merged into the consortium, forming one agency with locations in Middletown and Hamilton. It became a federally qualified community health center in 2007.

“We changed our name to Primary Health Solutions (PHS) in 2010,” explains Marc Bellisario, CEO, “to better reflect who we are and what we do: provide primary health care solutions to the residents of Butler County and beyond.”

In 2011, PHS opened a new 22,000-square-foot facility in Middletown. The Foundation’s gift is helping to build out the last dental surgical area.

This grant is the Foundation’s third to PHS. Grants in 2006 and 2007 helped the organization extend its reach and expand its services. “In 2006,” Marc notes, “we served 4,000 patients in 11,000 visits. By 2012, those numbers had grown to 15,000 patients and 40,000 visits.”

PHS recently received the highest level of certification available from the National Center for Quality Assurance, which qualifies the organization as a “patient-centered medical home,” caring for the whole person by providing a complete range of health care services.
“Most of our patients live below the poverty line,” Marc observes. “Our most important goal is to treat each person with respect regardless of his or her ability to pay and to provide the highest quality treatment for all of our patients. Support from Atrium Medical Center Foundation, coupled with Atrium Medical Center’s long-time partnership, allows us to accomplish our mission and bring more services to more people.”

[1] Atrium Medical Center Foundation made a grant to Primary Health Solutions (formerly Butler County Community Health Consortium) to help build out the last dental surgical area in their Middletown location.

Caring members of our community are the reason Atrium Medical Center Foundation succeeds in helping Atrium Medical Center inspire hope and deliver excellence. Individuals, families, businesses, foundations and community groups support the Foundation’s mission of building healthier communities for all who live and work in southwest Ohio.

In 2012, 752 donors contributed $918,208 to further the Foundation’s charitable work. These gifts reflect both pledges and cash contributions. Every gift is used for its designated intent. Every dollar is put to use where it will have the greatest impact touching lives and improving health.

CareSource Foundation Supports High Risk OB Clinic
Grants help to reduce premature births

CareSource Foundation funds Ohio organizations that focus on improving the lives of the underserved. It’s the charitable arm of Dayton-based CareSource, the second largest Medicaid managed care plan in the nation. In 2012, CareSource Foundation gave a generous grant to Atrium Medical Center Foundation’s Little Blessings campaign in support of the High Risk OB Clinic operated by Atrium Medical Center’s Maternal Child Health Center.

Thanks to the clinic’s innovative work, the number of premature babies born at Atrium’s Family Birth Center has been declining and remains significantly below the national average. Babies born at full term avoid major health problems and health care costs.

“Many of the more than 930,000 low-income members that CareSource works with in Ohio are young mothers who may have a limited support network or need special attention to ensure they deliver healthy babies,” notes Cathy Ponitz, executive director of CareSource Foundation. “Atrium’s High Risk OB Clinic has been a tremendous partner in our efforts to encourage healthy, full-term births for all mothers, so we were eager to fund this grant to support the clinic and are proud of our continued partnership.”

CareSource Foundation also supported the clinic with a grant in 2010.

“Our goal is to sustain and expand our successful efforts to reduce the rate of premature births in Butler and Warren counties,” notes Jessica Woodard, Atrium Medical Center Foundation’s development manager. “We are deeply grateful to the CareSource Foundation for its ongoing support.”

Lone Star Steakhouse ‘Dine and Donate’ Benefits Safe Sleep Program

In April 2012, Ryan Harney, an employee at Middletown’s Lone Star Steakhouse, lost his baby niece, Aubrey Hurst, due to an unsafe sleep environment. “Our employees wanted to help Ryan and his family,” explains Bryan Mitchell, general manager. “About the same time, our corporate office started a ‘dine and donate’ program. Team Middletown was the first to implement it.”

To memorialize baby Aubrey, Middletown’s Lone Star donated 15 percent of proceeds from meals purchased during the month of April to Atrium Medical Center Foundation’s Little Blessings campaign to help support the hospital’s Safe Sleep and HEAL (Help Endure a Loss) programs. The restaurant repeated the Dine and Donate promotion in October, Safe Sleep Awareness Month. During both promotions, Lone Star employees and customers were urged to spread the word about safe sleep. The restaurant reached out to the community via traditional and social media to raise awareness about safe sleep environments for infants and to encourage diners to visit the restaurant and support fundraising efforts.

“Our employees learned a lot about potential reasons for sudden infant death,” says Bryan. “The experience was a big eye-opener for them. We are hoping to partner with the Foundation on other projects in the future.”

Auxiliary Achieves Another Banner Year
Donates $85,000 for hospital projects, equipment and scholarships

Almost 100 years after its founding in 1914, Atrium Auxiliary Middletown is still going strong. Currently, 119 of the hospital’s 278 volunteers are Auxiliary members. With leadership from a board of nearly 20 members, auxilians support the hospital through their service as well as their participation in special fundraising efforts.

In 2012, the Auxiliary gave more than $65,000 to the Foundation to help fund the HEAL (Help Endure a Loss) Endowment and the HEAL family room, part of the Little Blessings campaign; a bladder scanner and cart; two portable vital signs monitors; and the da Vinci robotic surgical system, the final payment on a three-year pledge. In addition, the Auxiliary donated $20,000 in scholarship support for Atrium employees and family members who wish to pursue or enhance their career in health care.

In addition to providing financial support, the Auxiliary supplies children’s books and volunteer-made dolls for the Emergency Trauma Center; furnishes yarn for hats and blankets for newborns and chemotherapy patients; and makes hospital stays more pleasant with reading material, games and patient visits through the Friends Program.

“We want to help the hospital in any way we can,” explains Patricia Miller Gage, Auxiliary president for the third time and Atrium Medical Center Foundation board member. “Atrium’s auxilians are tireless in their efforts. They are real jewels.” Members raise funds through the Hilltop Gift Shop, a pre-Mother’s Day flower sale and twice yearly jewelry and book sales.

“The Auxiliary’s hard work and dedication make a real difference for our patients and their loved ones,” says Jessica A. Woodard, Foundation development manager. “We’re very grateful for all their efforts on the hospital’s behalf.”

Remembering Their Colleagues

Atrium employees fund a memorial garden to honor their coworkers

In 2012, after several Atrium Medical Center employees had passed away in quick succession, Carol Turner, Atrium president and CEO, decided it was time to create a way to honor all employees, medical staff and volunteers who have died since the new hospital opened its doors in December 2007, as well as those who will follow them in years to come.

Everyone expressed interest in creating an Atrium Caregivers Memory Garden along the walking trail that meanders through Atrium’s campus. The 2012 employee appeal was the first step toward making this garden a reality. Generous Atrium employees along with volunteers, physicians, Foundation board members and others donated almost $50,000 to honor their coworkers and friends.

Co-chairing the fundraising campaign were John McKinney III, Facility Maintenance Services director and corporate safety officer; Gregory K. Neumann, Nutrition Services director; and Marilyn J. Noll, MT(ACSCP), director of Outpatient and Ambulatory Services. “This beautiful memorial garden ensures that our caregivers who pass away are never forgotten,” says Marilyn.

You may memorialize other caregivers associated with Atrium or Middletown Regional Hospital by purchasing a paver brick in their name for the garden. This includes deceased employees, retirees, medical staff members and volunteers who worked at Middletown Regional Hospital but not Atrium, as well as deceased Atrium retirees. For more information, please contact the Foundation at (513) 420-5144 or Foundation@AtriumMedCenter.org.

Atrium employees helped to make possible the Atrium Caregivers Memory Garden, honoring all employees, medical staff and volunteers who have passed away since Atrium opened in December 2007.

Book Signing Benefits Atrium’s Cancer Center
Atrium employee tells her inspirational story.

In her poem “Cancer, Unwelcome Guest,” Shobha Patel, Atrium Medical Center’s manager of cardiology services, writes, “Life’s River takes you through mountains and valleys.” Shobha, a two-time breast-cancer survivor, and her friends – writer and poet Renu Gupta and hypnotherapist Shubhra Sharma – recount the peaks and valleys of Shobha’s cancer journey in their novel that was published in India and released in September 2012. The book’s title, Mrutyor Maamrutam Gamaya, loosely translated into English means “Lead Us from the Fear of Death to the Knowledge of Immortality.”

Shobha’s story is told as a conversation between the main character (a composite of Shobha and other survivors) and a friend. “Within the story, we communicate information on the medical and emotional aspects of living with cancer,” Shobha explains.

On September 8, 2012, Shobha and Renu hosted a reception and book signing at the Jain Center in West Chester. Guests received a book in exchange for a $25 donation to Atrium Medical Center Foundation. The book is written in Hindi (with a few of Shobha’s poems included in English). “Some of our guests could not read it,” says Shobha, “but that didn’t stop them from donating $25 – and in some cases, more.” All funds were earmarked for Atrium’s Cancer Center.
Hunter IGA Express Supports the HEAL Program
Helping others is business as usual for Vince Vaske and his team

Loyalty goes both ways according to Vince Vaske, manager of the IGA Express in Hunter. “When folks shop at your store, you want to return the favor by supporting causes that are important to them.”

Vince’s team had been helping the family of a seriously ill child, who then passed away. Vince wasn’t sure what charitable effort the store would pursue next. Then fate intervened. “One of our vendors, who had lost an infant, asked if we would be interested in helping the HEAL (Help Endure a Loss) Program at Atrium Medical Center,” Vince recalls, “maybe donate some ice to help with the group’s 2012 Family Festival.” HEAL helps families cope with the death of an infant.

Before all was said and done, not only had the Hunter IGA Express donated all the food for the annual summer picnic, but Vince and his co-workers had also grabbed their grills and were onsite to cook as well. The store also donated proceeds from its own annual Kids Fest to HEAL, and when the holidays rolled around the IGA Express provided food at cost for the annual Memory Tree Lighting.

“When that grief-stricken parent first reached out to me, my children and I were mourning the loss of their mother,” Vince explains. “It felt good to help someone else whose loss I can’t even imagine. Who would not want to support the HEAL Program?”

IGA Express in Hunter donated proceeds from its annual Kids Fest to HEAL (Help Endure a Loss), which helps families cope with the death of an infant.
